DOYLESTOWN

Doylestown, May 28, 1907.

Unless something unforeseen occurs the county seat will have a steam roller to improve its thoroughfares, which have never been too creditable, and will get a number of other improvements. Just at present the only opposition seems to be from two Democratic Councilmen, one of whom is believed to be responsible for the weak and futile opposition being waged in a local newspaper through misrepresentation and an evident desire to keep the town from progressing.

The fight is bitter. It is remarkable how much antagonism has been provoked from two Democratic Councilmen who have been beaten into almost acknowledging that they are wrong and still persist in fighting the progressive members. Councilman George Watson introduced an ordinance authorizing the issuing of $30,000 worth of 4 per cent bonds, for the purpose of taking up the present $19,000 worth of 5 per cent bonds and giving a margin for the purchasing of the street roller and the repairing of the streets as well as the procuring of other improvements. The opposition claimed that the bond issue would be illegal because it provided for the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds by the tax on water consumers. They argue that it is not just to shoulder on the water taxpayers the expense of the other improvements, although they do not deny that the payers of water rent are practically all the people of the town.

Councilman John Randall, the principal opponent, suggested that if the money is raised it should be by the laying of an additional tax. Councilman Groff, in reply to this, charged him with being "foxy and sly," as he knew full well that this would kill the project, as Taxpayers he said, would resist an increased tax, while they would be willing to have the extra bonded indebtedness. Promoters of the bond issue allege that the opposition to it comes from the men who have always opposed any progressive movement in the town which has been proposed, and claim that their way is the only means of improving the county seat, as the citizens are not yet ready for a new charter.

There seems to be no doubt that the steam roller will come, for, seeing the opposition which developed a motion was carried instructing the Borough Committee to secure bids for a steam roller on the installment plan.

Another interesting question was settled. For a long time there have been charges that great waste of water has cost the borough considerable money. After discussing the subject Council decided to have an inspector visit all houses and ascertain whether there are any water connections which have not been reported to the borough treasurer, or any unnecessary leaks.

FLIM FLAM STORIES.

Senator Grim's organ of the Democracy at this place has been trying to convince the credulous that there is a big fight going on between the leaders and the members of the Republican party over the nomination for County Treasurer and the appointment of James Pollock. As the primary election law gives every citizen an opportunity to express his choice of candidates secretly according to his own convictions the Democrat is not succeeding very well in making anyone believe that there is much in what it says, and that if there was it would not be very serious. As to the appointment of Mr. Pollock they claim that the leaders are after Director Samuel O. Penrose because he caused the defeat of John Magill, of Solebury, for the Stewardship. The Democrat seems to have worked up the idea out of its fertile imagination just as it is trying to convince the local public that there is a great deal of opposition to the steam roller for the county seat, in the face of many public assertions made over the names of the residents in the papers. Few voters will be taken in by these vaporings as the public is well aware that such publications are periodical with The Democrat about election time, and are only published for the purpose of trapping the votes of weak-kneed Republicans.

THE RAILROAD FARE.

When word reached here of the readjustment of fares on the Philadelphia & Reading many of the commuters living here and traveling daily to Philadelphia were much excited. They feared that the price of monthly tickets would be increased considerably over the present price and a number of the men declared that if such a step was taken they would sell their homes in the county seat and move to Philadelphia. But it appears that there will be no increase, except in the twenty-six trip tickets, which will cost $1 more and consequently, everything seems to be serene again.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Learning the date of the fifteenth wedding anniversary of Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Waddell the members of the Senior and Junior C. E. Societies arranged a reception for Friday evening last, and it proved a splendid event. Cut glass gifts were presented to the pastor and his wife by the church organizations.

ARRESTED FOR TEN CENTS.

Just before May Criminal Court adjourned Abdon Lee, of Newtown township, was brought to the county jail, for refusing to pay a ten cent tax notice fee to Collector Stephen Betts. It was one of the most peculiar cases ever heard here. Mr. Lee immediately instituted habeas corpus proceedings and a hearing was held before Judge Stout.

It appears that last August a tax of $1 was levied and notices were sent out. On election day in November Mr. Lee offered Collector Betts $1 in payment of his taxes but it was not accepted as ten cents addition was demanded for the notice. This Mr. Lee refused to pay. Some time later the collector agreed to receive the dollar without the fee for notice, but he did not have an official receipt with him and Mr. Lee refused to accept any other or to go to the home of Mr. Betts to get the official one. It drifted along until finally Mr. Betts had Mr. Lee arrested and brought to Doylestown on Thursday, when he was discharged by Judge Stout because the arrest was not properly made. Mr. Lee was then re arrested and a hearing was held.

Judge Stout decided that there was no doubt that the 10 cent fee was illegal as it was twice as much as the law allows, but he remanded Mr. Lee to the custody of the sheriff on the ground that he should at least have paid the amount of the tax. Mr. Lee paid the $1 tax and the costs, but it was said for a time that Mr. Betts was liable to arrest for false arrest and for having collected illegal fees.

KIDNAPPING EXCITEMENT.

For just about one day the county seat had a kidnapping sensation that caused much talk. Hugh B. Eastburn, Esq., received word late one afternoon last week that a 12 year-old boy had arrived in New Hope with a strange story of having been kidnapped from his father's circus in Texas. New Hope authorities were convinced that the youngster's story was straight and Mr. Eastburn had him brought here. Prominent citizens interviewed, questioned and cross-questioned the child as closely as possible and all were convinced that he was telling the truth and that he had divulged the story of a great outrage. They were so much impressed with the child's story that there was talk of arresting a certain resident of the county who was believed to be implicated. The youngster said his name was John N. Pierce, that his father was A. L. Pierce who had a show which travelled through Texas, Central and South America, and that he was taken by two men connected with the circus and brought to a point near New Hope where he was abandoned. He described places and things in the countries he mentioned with such accuracy that there seemed no doubt that his story was good and the kind hearted men who questioned him placed him in a private family here while they were investigating. That day the local papers had a big story of the affair but they had no sooner reached Lahaska than all the mystery of the kidnapping was dispelled. John, it was found, had skipped from a private boarding school in Lahaska and was not far from it when picked up by a team, after he had told his great fairy tale. Then the men who had befriended the child started to look him up and found that he was missing. He had run away again, and it is believed that he has gone to his grandparents in Philadelphia. Part of his story was found to be correct. He gave his right name. His father, A. L. Pierce, does have a show as described and the boy was enabled to tell such a slick tale because he had an accurate knowledge of the countries of which he spoke.

NEWTOWN LIGHT TROUBLE.

Some of the evidence in Newtown's great light troubles was given in Court Monday, before Judge Mahlon H. Stout, but the case came to a sudden stop when the plaintiff's amended their bill and the defendants pleaded surprise. Adjournment was, therefore, made until June 7th. An idea of the intensity of interest felt in the case was shown by the large attendance of witnesses on both sides.

PENNSYLVANIA HISTORY CLUB

For their annual pilgrimage the Pennsylvania History Club came to the county seat, Saturday and were met by a committee from the Bucks County Historical Society. At the Society's museum they were delighted with the collection of "Tools of the Nationmaker" and listened to an address on that subject by Henry C. Mercer.

A visit to the Indian House and Moravian Pottery of Henry C. Mercer was then made, where the making of the celebrated tile and its conception was explained by Mr. Mercer.

At four o'clock the club, escorted by the committee of the Historical Society, boarded the trolley cars and went to Greame Park, the home of the Colonial Governor of Pennsylvania, Sir William Keith, on County Line road, just over the Bucks border.

A resolution was adopted to petition the Governor of Pennsylvania to take steps to have the State purchase the old mansion of Sir William Keith, known as Greamer Park, erected in 1721 2, and put it in repair, holding it as a relic of colonial days.

It was decided to request the county historical societies of Pennsylvania to endorse the action of the club and co-operate in securing the preservation of the old mansion. The matter will be further discussed at the stated meeting of the club.

Those who came Saturday were President Charles M. Andrews, of Bryn Mawr; Dr. Isaac Sharpless, president of Haverford College; Prof. Herman V. Ames, of the University of Pennsylvania and Sydney George Fisher, of Philadelphia, vice presidents of the club, Prof. Albert E. McKinley, professor of history of Temple College; Philadelphia, Prof. Marion D. Learned, of the University of Pennsylvania; H. B. Chandler, Esq.; Mrs. T. Robert Harper, Philadelphia: H. G. Ashmead, Chester; Burton Alva Konkle, of Swarthmore.

HISTORICAL DEDICATION

No event of recent months has brought to the county more residents from all parts of the county than did the dedication of the Bucks County Historical Society's new building today. It was a happy occasion for the members who have been looking forward to it for a long time. Everyone was delighted with the handsome structure and those who had not seen it before were surprised as well with the building as with the attractive arrangement of the collection and the furniture installed. There was a set programme in which a number of visitors took an informal part.

Among those who made addresses were: Louis Richards, president of the Berks County Historical Society; W. W. Woodruff, of West Chester; Charles M. Pennypacker, Ex Burgess of West Chester; George W. Elkins, of Philadelphia; Captain William Wynkoop, of Newtown and John M. Longstreth, of Philadelphia.

The following members were elected: James M. Shelley, Doylestown; Mrs. C. D. Hotchkiss, Doylestown, Dr. J. E. Scott, Mrs. J. E. Scott, New Hope; Charles M. Meredith, Wilson Yeakel, Perkasie; W. W. Woodruff, Charles H. Pennypacker, West Chester; Mrs. George F. Ourwen, Villa Nova.

Librarian Warren S. Ely presented the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, that the society co-operate with the Pennsylvania History Club in an effort to have the State assist in the preservation of Graeme Hall, the residence of Sir William Keith, 1718-1724.

Natural Scientists at Morrisville.

Members of the Delaware Valley Naturalists' Union, Bucks County Natural Science Association and Moorestown Natural History Society Saturday made a pilgrimage to the 100-acre nursery of Samuel C. Moon, at Morrisville. A visit was made to the large purple beech which has attracted visitors from all parts of the world. The tree is noted for its height, perfection of formation and pronounced shading. Professor A. C. Apgar, of Trenton, declared it was the finest specimen of the purple beech in America.

Professor H. Clay Borden, of the Central Manual Training School, Philadelphia, gave an address on local geology. He said that fossil remains showed that the nursery was at one time a seashore, while unearthed bones and implements of man gave evidence that the climate at that time was of an Arctic nature.

Don't Neglect It

It is a serious mistake to neglect a weak heart. It is such a short step to chronic heart disease. When you notice irregularity of action, occasioning short breath, palpitation, fluttering, pain in chest or difficulty in lying on left side, your heart needs help—a strengthening tonic. There is no better remedy than Dr. Miles' Heart Cure. Its strengthening influence is felt almost at once.

"I have used 10 bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and can truthfully say it has done me more good than anything I have ever used, and I have tried nearly everything that I know of. The doctor who attended me asked me what I was taking and I told him Dr. Miles Heart Cure, he said it was not going to do me any good, but it did. I have not taken any for a year now, and while there is occasionally a slight symptom of the old trouble, it is not enough for me to continue the use of the medicine. If I should get worse I would know what to do. Take Dr. Miles' Heart Cure as I did before. I consider myself practically cured of my heart trouble."
S. H. DUNNAM, Livingston, Texas.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails he will refund your money.

FRIDAY, MAY 31 1907.

THE PRIMARIES TOMORROW.

The voters of Bucks county will have a novel experience tomorrow when for the first time according to the provisions of the uniform primary law they will have opportunity to go the the polling places where the regular elections are held and vote for the candidate of their choice for county nominations

The polls will be open at the various polling places between the hours of two and eight p m Under the law all hotels and saloons will be closed from one to nine p m

The voter upon going to the polling place will find there the regular election board The voter will indicate his politics by requesting a Republican Democrat or Prohibition ticket and, if required will testify to the fact that he voted for a majority of the candidates at the preceding election, upon the ticket he now desires to vote

He will be handed a ticket containing the names of the candidates of the party he supports the ballot being torn from a book which was printed under the direction of the County Commissioners, just as the regular election ballots are printed In opening the ballot the voter will find the names of the candidates arranged in alphabetical order under the headings of the respective offices As an illustration the Republican candidates for County Treasurer will appear about as follows

FOR COUNTY TREASURER

Henry S Beidler
Wilmer W Cornell
William Penrose Sr
G Wynkoop Rubincam
Harry Wilkinson

The voter expresses his choice by making a cross (x) mark in the square at the right of the candidate s name he desires to be nominated for the office.

The candidates for the other offices and for State delegates and party committee men will be nominated and elected in the same manner

Back to the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary the Republican nominations in Bucks county have been made by a weird and unrepresentative method known as the mass convention system For years the Gazette labored to have that system abolished but without avail As a member of the Legislature the editor of this paper, at the extra session in 1906 took an active part in the passage of the uniform primary law, and personally solicited Governor Pennypacker to include that proposed feature of legislation in his call for the extraordinary session

Under that law which was passed by the Legislature last year tomorrow the Republicans of Bucks county will make their first nomination It is the fairest system that the mind of man has conceived Nominations are placed directly in the hands of the voters and the candidates receiving the highest number of votes will be nominated

In the Republican party there are rival candidates for all of the principal county offices except for delegates to the State convention The field is an open one The aspirants have traveled the county, and have set forth their claims and made their appeals to the voters The contests have been friendly and there has been an entire absence of any bitterness of feelings

May the best men win and for the election in November the Gazette will give its hearty support to the Republican candidates who have been victorious in first battle under the new uniform primary law

Great free for all race at the Republic an primaries tomorrow afternoon Big list of entries. Some fine steppers in the bunch The contestants have been scoring up for some time and all are in good condition The gong sounds at two o'clock Then they will be off! Here s to the winners!

A RURAL PLAYGROUND.

The following news item appears in the columns of "Village Improvement" for September, 1906

A public spirited man in Hasbrouck Heights, Mass, has given the use of a large field for a public recreation ground where there is tennis and baseball and trees and benches and a sand box The town is much smaller than our own There is nowhere the evidence of wealth and yet they have this playground Is there no one in this community who could do as this man has for his little town?"

Bristol repeats the question and trusts to find an answer in the hearts of her citizens.

We read constantly in the daily papers of playground after playground being opened in towns and villages. The movement is alive and growing and promises to extend its good influences to the lads and lassies of city and country alike.

In the May number of the Outlook, Raymond V Phelan professor of Economics and Sociology at Miami University, says ' I seriously question the right of witholding the ballot from women, even if a large majority of them shrink from assuming political and civil responsibilities.

' Shall we deny to the enlightened intelligent woman who wants to govern herself, the right that in the United States is granted to the ignorant foreigner and the lowly negro? Some women having risen to the full stature of the new, freer womanhood, demand the ballot. They should have it The English, the American woman, the woman in every enlightened country in this advanced twentieth century, has as much moral right to vote as has a man, and England and the United States will continue to be Democracies but in name as long as their women are denied equal political rights with men '

Republicans don't forget the primaries tomorrow Polls open from two to eight p. m. There is a good list of candidates from which to make selection

The primary election tomorrow in Bucks county will be a farce as far as the Democratic ticket is concerned There are no contests for any of the offices, only one candidate has registered for each office. There will be no necessity of Democrats going to the polls tomorrow One ballot will nominate the ticket Great is Grim! The vaunted Grundy machine is a "skeeter" in comparison

Much interest is centered in the primaries in Bucks county tomorrow for it will be the first application of the new law The day of the county convention is past, for this new law decrees that the people must make a direct choice of candidates The candidates for nomination must appeal for support direct to the people

In other words the voters will constitute themselves a county convention and will select candidates from among those who have filed their applications, as given in another column

The Republican contest will be a spirited one as there are rival candidates for the principal nominations

It would seem hardly necessary to urge upon the voters the necessity of their casting their ballots, for those who have been clamoring for unbossed conventions now have granted to them the opportunity to directly exercise the rights they have demanded Republicans should see that a big party vote is cast at the primaries for the first time at least under the operations of the new law

Basis of School Appropriation.

The State Department of Public Instruction has issued a statement calling attention to the provisions of the bill presented in the Legislature by Representative Catroll, of Fayette county and recently signed by Governor Stuart, abolishing one of the enumerations of school children

Speaking of it, Deputy Superintendent Glenn said The Catroll Act is one of great importance to school boards It authorizes and directs the State Superintendent to use the returns of the enrollment of children between the ages of 6 and 16 years, made under the compulsory attendance laws for the distribution of one third of its school appropriation Heretofore a separate enrollment has been made in the fall for appropriation purposes The full enrollment has been abolished and the May enrollment substituted Hence the necessity for school boards to see that the list of children now being returned to the county commissioners are correct, as one third of the school money they will get from the State for the next two years will be based on them

The Emancipated Farmer.

An exchange has this to say of the emancipated farmer Life on the farm is growing better every year The progress of invention and discovery has benefitted the farmer in proportion to other people He is no longer a slave His liberation has come about through rural free delivery of mail, extension of the street rail way and the constantly growing telephone system The farmer keeps in close touch with affairs of the world through his newspaper left at his door every morning He follows the market and is able to sell his products to a better advantage He is placed in close contact with friends in town and he and they are better for their frequent meeting He is master of the greatest business on earth the only source of life and wealth He has his societies his schools his churches and his neighbors His work is hard but it is not harder than that of men in offices and mills He is in touch with nature s God in his plowing and sowing and harvesting While he may not accumulate great wealth he can at least maintain an honorable and independent position among his fellows Farming is far from the least of professions

Few Changes in Fish Laws

In reply to inquiries as to what changes the Legislature has made in the fish laws William E Meehan State Commissioner of Fisheries writes the following

Senate bill 88 which was the department s fish bill failed of passage for lack of time hence the Act of 1901 will remain on the statute books except as to one amendment which has been signed by the Governor and possibly a couple of others which are in the Governor s hands

One amendment is to Section of the Act of May 29 1901 which permits an unlimited number of tip ups for fishing through the ice for pickerel and yellow perch, limiting the daily catch of each of both to 20 pounds also making the number of rods for game fish unlimited and making violations of the sections misdemeanors

There is nothing in the amendment to indicate that unlimited hand lines are included or that there may be unlimited rods or unlimited hand lines for suckers and food fish As soon as possible I shall submit the matter to the Attorney General for his opinion

An Act which has been passed and signed by the Governor permits gigging of suckers and carp from May 1 to October 31, inclusive, in public waters not inhabited by trout

Where Pennsylvania Shines

Outside observers may think that Pennsylvania is outrageously extravagant in spending $57 000,000 in the next two years but this is a big commonwealth It is great in more ways than any other State and its real wealth far surpasses that of any other in the whole Union School children are taught that Pennsylvania is noted for its coal iron and petroleum " and it has been so conspicuous in its mineral output that due credit is sometimes not given its other resources But while our mineral industries have totally eclipsed those of less fortunate States Penn s Commonwealth has other things to boast of

From Maine down the entire Atlantic seaboard and around the Gulf to the Mississippi in a territory embracing, with inland Southern States, some twenty two in all, Pennsylvania stands first as a wheat producer and first as a corn grower While New York may have more hay and oats Pennsylvania outclasses it in tobacco and in the production of manufactured lumber And Pennsylvania is the only State that can make a battleship from keel plate to 12 inch gun

The appropriations of the Legislature just adjourned are admittedly heavy The grand total of $57,000 000 is in excess of the revenue that is likely to be returned under our present tax laws The Governor therefore will have to shave down the appropriations. Even then they will still be large but no larger than can be judiciously and profitably expended — Philadelphia Press

Give All The Papers a Chance

Perkasie News

There is considerable legal advertising in the Row offices at Doylestown There is considerable stationery to print for Row offices in Doylestown We hold that all the newspapers of the county are entitled to a share not by the system of price slavery known as the lowest bid, ' either When so eminent an authority as the United States Government dictates that there shall be no competition between railroads as to freight rates and the Pennsylvania Legislature dictates that there shall be no competition between railroads as to passenger rates, it seems reasonable to us that the authorities of Bucks county could make a decent rate for advertising and job printing, and share it out among all the newspapers—making, say, a thousand circulation the basis for advertising, and further that in the matter of stationery job printing the job office must be connected with a newspaper

Rules which govern other labor and material should hardly be applied to the newspapers for they are the vehicles of information about the county, and boost for the county, that cannot be reckoned by auditors It would feel tough and look worse than it felt were a newspaper published in a borough or township to have to bid for the stationery of the offices! Isn't the county only a bigger borough, or township,

In this matter we are not tasting sour grapes, for we have been treated fairly thus far by both the old and the new dispensation However, there is always a doubt whether it is our turn next that torments.

These random thoughts are thus put to paper while regarding with sympathy the successful prices bid for the most recent jobs—and passion that certain legal advertising (license application, and mercantile appraisers lists, etc, for instance) always seems to go to the same place

LaFollette's New Senator.

The loss sustained by the United States Senate in the retirement of Senator Spooner, one of the ablest lawyers and soundest statesmen in that body is emphasized by the choice of his successor The Legislature of Wisconsin, after a month of balloting, has been able to agree upon no one more worthy to occupy the seat vacated by Senator Spooner than one Isaac Stephenson, 'a millionaire lumber man and banker, now in his 78th year, whose whole experience in national affairs was gained in a service of a few years in the House of Representatives some twenty years ago

The decline from Spooner to Stephenson would sufficiently mark the decadence of the Senate in any circumstances What makes his election especially grotesque is that he is the candidate of that vociferous 'trust buster,' LaFollette, whose chief financial backer he has been in his various campaigns against the octopus. Stephenson, in fact, is an octopus of the deepest dye representing the Wisconsin lumber monopoly, with its predatory wealth and pretty much all the crimes of capital ' which LaFollette has so eloquently denounced

It was his money, nevertheless, that enabled LaFollette to control the Senatorship, and the place goes to the man who paid for it just as would be expected in states that had never known reform ' It makes a great deal of difference in the iniquity of capital whether it is on the other side or on our own —Public Ledger

Operation of the Service Pension Act.

The new Service Pension act, which was approved in February and became at once effective provided that any person who had served ninety days in the army and navy in the Civil War and had received an honorable discharge should, when he had reached the age of sixty two receive a pension of $12 a month at seventy $15 a month and at seventy five or over $20 a month It was supposed when the new Pension bill was under consideration in Congress that there would be added to the roll of pensioners as a consequence of its adoption a large number of applicants who had not been previously drawing pensions To the surprise of the officials of the Pension Bureau out of 38,000 applications so far filed only 1½ per cent are of previously unpensioned veterans The remaining 98½ per cent are of soldiers who have been drawing a lower rate of pensions than that provided by the new law

This result goes to show that there are few veteran soldiers in the country not already on the rolls who are either needful or desirous of accepting the nation s gratuity The pension agents have made very thorough work in the finding out of all the pensionable remainder of the Union soldiers and sailors in the service during the great struggle The fact that there are so few veterans unprovided for will be a source of gratification It will also demonstrate that the Service Pension act will not add so largely to the burden of national expenditure as had been estimated From this time forward the number of veterans on the pension roll will show a decrease which will be accelerated by the infirmities of age as the years go by —Philadelphia Record

How to get Pure Milk.

A very important article of the month is Rochester's Pure Milk Campaign, ' by Samuel Hopkins Adams in the June McClure s in which Adams describes Rochester s pure milk campaign that began ten years ago and resulted last year, with its municipal supply of pure milk in the saving of the lives of one hundred and fifty children under five years of age, at a cost to the City of Rochester of about seven dollars and a half per human life

' It is a cheaper price for that commodity than any economic statistician (since Malthus) has ventured to set To preserve life at so insignificant an expense is perhaps the most expert specific achievement of modern American hygiene. In establishing such a standard Rochester has set an example for other communities to ponder, to take pattern by, as in time all our cities must, to improve upon as, happily, some of our cities in the fullness of time may

'The life saving is accomplished by furnishing pure milk Not sterilized milk not pasteurized milk, not any kind of otherwise ized baked, boiled or metamorphosed milk at all but just pure, clean milk furnished to young children in place of foul, diseased, poisoned milk ' And Mr Adams tells in his instructive article how the Rochester system was evolved, and gives figures and statements that graphically prove how simple a problem is pure milk—and a municipal supply, at that, when a Health Bureau goes at the problem in the right manner That the importance of Rochester's success is recognized widely is shown by the facts that technical points are being widely furnished in response to requests by the Rochester Health Bureau, which has already become a radiating eductional influence, and at the present time the Rochester plan seems likely to be followed by other cities.

Jay Gould s Cool Self Possession Under Trying Circumstances

An anecdote strikingly illustrating the cool self possession of the late Jay Gould under the most trying circumstances was recently related by a member of the family

An old friend had gone to Gould, telling him that he had managed to save up some $20 000 and asking his advice as to how he should invest it in such a manner as to be absolutely safe for the benefit of his family Gould told him to invest it in a certain stock and assured him that the investment would be absolutely safe as to income and, besides its market value would shortly be greatly enhanced

The man did as advised by Gould and the stock promptly started to go down Lower and lower it went and, seeing the steady depreciation in the price of the stock and hearing stories to the effect that the dividends were to be passed the man wrote to Gould asking if the investment was still good Gould replied to his friend's letter as suring him that the stories had no foundation in fact and were being circulated purely for market effect

But still the stock declined Each day the price went to new lower figures on the Stock Exchange and finally the rumors became fact and the directors passed the dividend The man had seen the savings of years vanish in a few months and realized that he was a ruined man

Goaded to an almost insane frenzy he rushed into Gould s office the afternoon the directors announced the passing of the dividend and told Gould that he had been deliberately and grossly deceived and that he was ruined He wound up by announcing his intention of shooting Gould then and there

Gould heard his quondam friend through There could be no mistaking the man s intent He was evidently half crazed and possessed of an insane desire to carry out his threat Gould turned to him and said

My dear Mr — calling him by name you are laboring under a most serious misapprehension Your money is not lost If you will go down to my bank tomorrow morning you will find there a balance of $25 000 to your credit I ... your stock some time ago but hadn't decided to notify you The man looked at him in amazement and half doubting left the office

As soon as he had left the office Gould sent word to his bank to place $27 000 to this man s credit That an spent a long sleepless night torn by doubts and fears When the bank opened for business he was the first man in line and was nearly overcome when the cashier handed him the sum that Gould had named the previous afternoon

Gould had evidently decided in his own mind that the man was determined to kill him and that the only way to save his life and his name was to pay the man the sum he had lost plus a profit in the manner he did But as a side light on the absolutely cold blooded self possession of the man it is interesting —New York Times

The Silent Man Discourses

"If people knew the value of keeping their mouths shut they wouldn t talk so much said the silent man

When a man gets overheated and then goes out in the air and jabbers he catches cold and maybe gets a sore throat If he kept his mouth shut the probability is he wouldn t get the cold. The Lord gave a man a nose to breathe through and if he used it for that more faithfully instead of using it for a prodding stick to find out what is going on with other people there wouldn t be so many cases of nasal catarrh Your nose is healthier if you use it for the purpose for which it was intended the same as any other organ of the body And it isn t a bad idea to wash it out once in a while with warm water

The mouth never was made to talk through It was made to eat through If there had been any other convenient location the windpipe and the tongue could have been put there just as well You can live without talking but you can t live without eating and I ve never heard of a deaf and dumb man who talked so much with his fingers that he reduced himself to a nervous wreck as some men and women do The tongue is like the flowers It s a favor the Lord gave us not a necessity and we ought to show appreciation by using it properly '

After which the silent man shut his mouth Columbus Dispatch

Graft In Toothpicks

The time worn question of What becomes of the pins has now given way to What becomes of the tooth picks It s a question that I ve never been able to answer said a restaurant keeper although I ask it every year when my toothpick bill comes in I buy them cheap in huge quantities but my bill is no unimportant item in my expenses They vanish from the tables and counters as if by magic for they do not go off one or two at a time but by the handful Why under the canopy a customer should help himself to a handful of toothpicks at the conclusion of his meal I cannot understand It seems as if he must feed them to the dog or use them for fire wood for the next day he is sure to show up for another handful Time and time again I have seen a customer dump the entire contents of the toothpick holder into his pocket and, although I was indignant I could not protest over so small a thing as toothpicks If you searched the pockets of nine men out of ten you d find from ten to a dozen toothpicks tucked away in them I can see why a man helps himself to a bunch of matches when he buys a cigar but this toothpick graft is beyond me' —New York Press

Lack of Sea Room on the Lakes

The wind often reaches a very high velocity on the lakes blowing at times sixty seventy and on rare occasions eighty miles an hour when the great fleet of lake craft is sure to be depleted by disaster and watery graves added to the great marine cemetery On such occasions the sea raised would hardly inconvenience an ocean going tug but by reason of the short distance from shore to shore— lack of sea room the mariners term it—vessels are unable to hold a course in the open waters and are driven by the wind upon the treacherous beaches there to be pounded into splinters Danger lurks everywhere in the shallower lakes—particularly Erie—where vessels of any considerable draft are apt to pound bottom if caught in a storm and go to pieces like a shattered wineglass —New York Post.

Witches Still Believed In.

Neglected by the powers witches ceased to be so notorious but the belief continued to exist and does exist now in rural parts of Scotland and England and in England and France even in the towns fortune tellers, whether they charge a guinea or a shilling for their advice are witches under the terms of the old statutes and flourish abundantly but as they are not burned they are supposed by superficial observers to have been exterminated by school boards and electric lighting The blackest sort of witch who "overlooks and casts spells on man and beast may be found in many rural regions north and south One of them was brought before a squire and justice of the peace of my acquaintance as a dangerous nuisance He said to her solemnly, You know Betty the Bible says Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live in the parish' " And she migrated under certain conditions of compensation, to another parish —London Post

Was This a Trained Mad Dog?

Not long ago a telephone call was received at the Flora avenue police station requesting that an officer be sent to a house to kill a dog supposedly mad When the officer arrived he met a negro

There s a dog under them steps an he s shore mad the negro said excitedly

The officer fired one shot without hitting the dog The animal started to run away

'Gimme that gun quick I'll kill him" the negro shouted

Saying which he reached for the officer's revolver and got it He then pursued the dog aiming the revolver at it as it ran yelping down the street The policeman waited expecting the negro to shoot at any moment. The negro and dog—and the revolver—went round a corner and never came back The officer has bought another revolver He says he thinks the dog was trained —Kansas City Star

Changing His Colors.

Every Sunday a young bootblack in New York attended a mission school This school through its well meaning teachers decided to have a Christmas tree The gifts for the pupils were provided for them by the teachers and some patrons of the school

Jimmy the bootblack, was there Christmas eve, but was much disappointed when his present proved to be a copy of Browning s poems He folded it carefully in the paper in which he received it and took it home

The next Sunday the superintendent of the mission school announced that any child who was disappointed with his or her gift could exchange it

Jimmy marched boldly to the front with his

"What have you there, Jimmy?"
"Browning sir "
"And what do you want in exchange?"
"Blacking, sir."

IN LOVE AND WAR.

An Incident Which Brings Out Their Simple Ethics.

This is a true story and I tell all that I know of it and being wholly true, it is a very short story and very sad writes David Starr Jordan in Harper s Weekly It was in 1876, eleven years after the close of the civil war I had taken the train at Louisville on that branch of the Louisville and Nashville railroad which then found its terminus at Livingstone in Rock Castle county in Kentucky A lady shared my seat in the train as far as Crab Orchard Springs She was comely and well dressed a condition not uncommon in Kentucky and withal sad eyed and in those days that too was common north and south

Before we had reached Crab Orchard she told me her story and this is it, as well as I can recall it

She was in Kentucky on a visit to kinsfolk at Crab Orchard Her home was on a plantation in the Tennessee bottoms not far from the town of Corinth in Mississippi In the days when the struggles of the war centered about Corinth and Shiloh this plantation was between the Confederate and Union lines more often just inside the latter She was a southern woman, with all the intensity of feeling which this implied in better times and her two brothers were officers in the Confederate army Though she had no love for the blue yet a soldier is a soldier and a man is a man There was a lieutenant of the Federal scouts—he may have been a sergeant but that does not matter—who had charmed her into a sort of friendliness by his bright wit and his boyish good humor Somewhere in Ohio he claimed as his home and when stationed on the plantation he and his men had shown a degree of consideration and courtesy not always seen among soldiers Moreover she had let him tell something of his life at home He spoke of his sister and his mother and there were times when she almost forgot the hated army of invaders to which he belonged but not for long and one night—for the plantation was between the lines—a group of Confederate officers came in and she heard them tell of a scheme to cut off this Ohio squad and the young fellow in command of it They were sure that they knew how they could do it

The next day the boy rode up to the plantation again He brought his sister s picture and the mother s too and the picture of the farmhouse in Ohio Should she put him on his guard? Just a word would be enough Should she be true to herself as a woman or should she be true to the cause of her brothers to Mississippi to the south? And at last the problem settled itself for the boy rode away unwarned And when after the little skirmish they brought him back to the house again the pictures were stained with blood

These pictures she still holds And this was the question she asked me—the question she has doubtless asked of many others, for all this had happened thirteen years before Did I do right? What should I have done? What could I have done?

And to this question there can be no answer In love and war there is no standard code of ethics The story of war is written in the blood of men and the tears of women

Another Kind of Pipe

'There is a boy who is no respecter of persons when he has a joke that he thinks must be sprung said the superintendent of one of the city hospitals as he passed out of the elevator in his institution My men he continued, look upon me as a stern disciplinarian, and I do not intend to have them change their views if I can help it But that elevator boy will spring a joke upon me every time the opportunity comes His latest one made me fairly boil I was so mad but it was no use saying anything I was walking through the basement which consists of a series of long tunnels As I entered one I smelled tobacco smoke which is an unusual thing in my hospital After a short investigation I saw one of the plumbers at the other end of the tunnel I quickened my steps to catch up with him but he entered the elevator and ascended to the upper stories I rang for the elevator to come down and after it arrived I asked the boy whom he took up with him just before 'The boss plumber, sah,' he answered 'Was he smoking?' was my next question I—I —I dunno, sah but he—he had a pipe in his hand that black rascal said Thinking that I had caught the offender with the goods on him, I got off at the fifth floor and soon found my man Yes, he had a pipe in his hand' but it was three feet of lead pipe"—Philadelphia Record

Things He Didn't Understand.

A shrewd, worldly agnostic and a Christian clergyman dressed in a modest clerical suit sat at the same table in the Pullman dining car They were waiting for the first course at the dinner, a delicious Hudson river shad. Eying his companion coldly for a moment, the agnostic remarked

"I judge you are a clergyman, sir?"
"Yes, sir I am in my Master s service "
"Yes, you look it Preach out of the Bible don t you?"
"Oh yes, of course"
"Find a good many things in that old book that you don't understand, don't you?
"Oh, yes, some things"
"Well, what do you do then?"
"Why, my dear friend, I simply do just as I do while eating this delicious shad If I come to a bone I quietly lay it on one side and go on enjoying the shad and let some fool insist on choking himself with the bones"

Then the agnostic wound up his Waterbury watch and went into the smoker —Exchange

Shall Bristol Have a Hospital?

Last evening about twenty-five men met at the First Baptist Church and considered the question of the necessity of a hospital in Bristol

Rev. Johnston, the pastor of the church, was chairman of the meeting. The local physicians, Drs. Martin, Abbott, Wilson and LeCompte, were present and each one gave it as his opinion that there was no question as to the necessity of a hospital, and each was willing to heartily co operate in the project and contribute their services in the event of the establishment of such an institution.

The question of finances was thoroughly debated. It was estimated that it would require about $4000 to maintain such a hospital as is needed in the borough. Rev. Johnston said that he knew several rooms would be furnished by private parties: and if pledges of $2500 per year were made, he knew where the remainder could be obtained He stated that $60,000 a year was spent in Bristol for rum, and he would not believe that the insignificant sum required to maintain a worthy charitable institution could not be raised.

The scope and plan of the project was thoroughly discussed and it was given definite shape by the appointment of committees to get accurate knowledge of what would be required to get a hospital started. Joseph S. Thomas was delegated to obtain the information of the cost of furnishing and equipping a cottage hospital, and E. W. Minster, William C. Peirce and Doron Green were appointed a committee to outline a plan whereby the necessary money can be raised.

The Philadelphia papers contained an item this week that Harrison N. Pope, an old man of Bristol, Pa., was arrested in Camden for robbing the Union M. E. Church, of that city, and that the person was sent to jail in default of $500. Inquiry here failed to reveal the identity of any person by that name.

The Cry of The Children.

"Mankind are always happier for having been happy, so that if you make them happy now, you make them happy twenty years hence by the memory of it."—SYDNEY SMITH

"Whenever anything is growing one former is worth a thousand reformers"—HORACE MANN

"He who helps a child helps humanity with an immediateness which no other help given to a human creature in any other stage of human life can possibly give again"—PHILLIPS BROOKS

More than sixty years have passed since the voice of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, clear and beautiful and solemn, was lifted in England, calling English men and women to look upon the unspeakable sorrows of little children in the mills and mines of their beautiful and happy land Progress has been great since then, and the wheels of civilization have made many and mighty revolutions since she penned her sad and thrilling poem and yet, even today, that "Cry of the Children" comes with its appealing tones to the ear that can hear and understand

"The young lambs are bleating in the meadows,
The young birds are chirping in the nest,
The young fawns are playing in the shadows,
The young flowers are blowing towards the west,
But the young, young children, O, my brothers!
They are weeping bitterly!
They are weeping in the playtime of the others,
In the country of the free"

And from whom does this cry come? Not from our little ones, our darlings, whom we shelter so tenderly, that, if we could help it, the winds of heaven should never visit them too roughly Not from our boys and girls, beautiful and brave, who take their joyous way to school and college No, the cry is from those children in our midst who have not what every child should have, who are defrauded of some of the beautiful, inalienable rights of childhood. It is the inalienable the God given right of every child to play. It is written in every law of its members It is inborn in the happy healthy child. Only through activity can those rosy limbs of babyhood develop strength. Only by play can the boy and girl come into their own—the rightful inheritance of joy and health. "Play is the work of childhood," the task which loving Mother Nature gives them to do, the duty which she bids them fulfill. And so, alas for the child who has no time, no place to play! Alas for the youthful, bubbling energies, which, cut off from their rightful channel, from innocent helpful play, must seek one in another direction, in wrong doing and mischief, or else sink into the apathy and indifference of a maimed and stunted life!

And there are children in our midst who have no time to play. We need only watch for a little while at sundown to see them go home, so tired and weary. They are too tired to play. Poor children! They have gone to work too soon They do not cry They do not even complain. They are too brave for that, and they know too well the meaning of the hard earned dollars. But the time will come when they will cry out in bitterness of heart for their lost childhood and for all that went with it.

For they cannot read very well, these children. A little simple story is too hard for them. And they do not know very much An easy question puzzles them. What will they do, thus handicapped in the hard battle of life? Whose fault is it that they have no chance to play? Whether it be that of the parent or the employer, whether it be poverty, ignorance, avarice, or a too complex social order, the children pay the penalty and it isn't right It isn't right.

There is another cry, very urgent and insistent, and a very righteous one We dare not shut our ears to this call. When the schools are closed and the long summer days are here, great is the need of the children for a place to play. A game of ball—how the boys long for it, and how much good it does them, body and spirit! But where will they find a place, where the ball will not go over the fence, break our windows, perhaps, and their joyous outcry offend our ears, kindly disposed though we may be?

It is a difficult problem for the boy mind to solve, as well as for our own. And the waterside and the wharves are so enticing and it is so easy to wander away and outside the limit of the town, where the voices that call at home cannot come. Oh, they will be so good, so happy, if they can only play! But the probation courts and the reformatories can tell us all too plainly what often happens when this sacred right is denied.

And shall we not listen to the voices of the little girls, the little mothers, to whose lot it falls to care for the younger children. Very, very often most patiently and most sweetly that duty is fulfilled. How lovely it would be on summer afternoons, how grateful to weary little feet, if, instead of the sunny street, where their presence is not desired, they could take the sick baby and the toddling little ones to some pleasant place of trees and grass!

And those wee ones, those little lambs, that are everywhere like the birds and buttercups and clover. Oh, give them a sandpile, a large and generous one, and their baby souls will ask no higher bliss.

Play grounds! A park! A hospital! Manual training in her schools! Child gardens for her little ones! Then, indeed, could Bristol stand with her head erect towards Heaven, and the children would rise up and call her blessed.

PRISONERS OF WAR IN BRISTOL

French-Canadians Brought from Albany, N. Y., to Bristol, in January, 1776---They Had the Liberty of the Town---An Interesting Historical Sketch Furnished by Burnet Landreth.

The following interesting article bearing on an incident connected with the early history of Bristol has been sent by Captain Burnet Landreth, of Bristol, to the Philadelphia Historical Society:

To the Philadelphia Historical Society —

Finding in a volume of the Pennsylvania Archives a record of names of prisoners of War held at Bristol during the first year of the Revolutionary period, I conceived the idea of endeavoring to add to that record some further details, and through the politeness of the Adjutant General of Canada, also from the Historical Society of Montreal, and more especially by the courtesy of the Archivest of Canada, am able to add some incidents which have not heretofore been printed. The record referred to in the Pennsylvania Archives is found on page 426, Volume 1st, 2d Series, but the list is deficient in numbers and the names is nearly every case are misspelled.

These officers were captured at Fort St. Jean on the 2d of November, 1775, by General Montgomery while on his bold but unfortunate expedition with nine hundred men against Quebec Fort St. Jean was situated on the Richelieu River, which connects Lake Champlain with the St. Lawrence. This fort was erected in 1748 by Monsieur de la Galissonniere, the French Governor of Canada, but was destroyed in 1760 It was rebuilt in 1775 by General Guy Carlton, of the British Army, and English Governor of Canada

When attacked by General Montgomery, the Fort was garrisoned by four hundred men of the 7th Fusiliers of the British Army, Major Preston, a detachment of the 26th and one hundred and fifty Canadian Militia, all French, from Montreal, only thirty miles distant. The garrison held out for forty five days, but finally were starved and worried into an unconditional surrender

This capture of the flag of the Fusiliers marked the taking of the first British colors surrendered to the Americans at the beginning of the War of the Revolution This regiment is now designated as the 1st Battalion Royal Fusiliers City of London Regiment or 114th of the line, and is stationed at Parkhurst—Isle of Wight

I have obtained information from the Military Academy at West Point that this same flag hangs in Cadet Chapel, a heavy twilled blue silk six by four feet, the Red Cross of St George superimposed upon a wider cross of white, the regimental number VII and the insignia of the Crown, Rose and Garter being placed in the center of the crosses, the crown embroidered in bullion The inscription "Honi Soit Qui Mal Y Pense," the Garter and Rose all embroidered in colored silks

The Commander in Chief of the French Auxiliaries, the Sieur de Roquemarre, would not surrender to the Americans but committed suicide by jumping over a precipice. The men were held prisoners at several points in New York State, and the Officers distributed among various towns in New York and Pennsylvania, some being held at Bristol, Lancaster, Easton and other points. The prisoners going to Bristol were sent from Albany, New York, by way of Easton in sleighs and suffered greatly from the intense cold Among the prisoners sent to Lancaster was Lieutenant John Andre, of the 7th, who eight years subsequently was induced to enter the American line in disguise, and as a consequence suffered death as a spy The twenty men sent to Bristol were drawn from among the first citizens of Montreal. The names of these twenty "officers and gentlemen" as they were styled by the authorities of the day, and as reported from the office of the Adjutant General and from the Archives of Canada, were as follows

Lieutenant Colonel The Chevalier Picote de Beletie,
Major De Longueill,
Ten Captains—

Messeurs Chambault,	Lotbiniere,
De Chenay,	DeBoucherville,
Du Tbinure,	De La Valtrie,
Havieux	De Rouville,
Gamiton	d'Eschambault.

Eight Lieutenants—
The Chevalior Hertil
and

Messeurs La Madelaine	DeMusseau
Lae Schmith	Fleurimont
De la Marque	De Roisseaux
Saint Ours

These twenty men did not comprehend the full number of French officers of the Militia captured at Fort St Jean, as Captain Duchesnay, one of the French-Canadian prisoners, wrote from Albany on the 31st of January, 1776, that he and Monsieur Lomerandier and some others were retained at Albany, whilst a detail had on that day started for Bristol. Consequently, the captured French officers numbered twenty-two by name and in all probability a larger number of subalterns were taken as the prisoners included ten Captains, which in numbers were fully sufficient to have represented a full regiment, although the official records state that the French auxiliaries only numbered one hundred and fifty men—this certainly must have been an error. It is not likely another case is on record where a fully officered battalion of French fought under the English flag as on all other occasions they were against the red coats

The prisoners at Bristol had the liberty of the town and surrounding country, and fully complied with the requirements of their parole and remained at Bristol until exchanged about one year after their capture

The town of Bristol, a village of fifty dwellings, had a resident population of less than three hundred, consequently the billeting there of a body of French men equal to one fifteenth of the population of the town, was a marked event, and if they were representative of their vivacious nation they must have made it interesting for the demure Quaker girls of the village and countryside

Every effort has been made both at Washington and Harrisburg to obtain the vouchers for subsistence furnished by those Bristol citizens who boarded the prisoners but the search has been fruitless.

While looking up the whereabouts of the flag of the 7th Fusiliers, I gathered from the records of the Military Academy the information that during the progress of the American Revolution fifty British standards were taken, five at Fort Stanwix, fifteen at Trenton, twenty five at Yorktown, two in the Carolinas, and three at other points.

To these fifty battle flags thirteen or more other English Regimental flags should have been turned over to General Gates by General Burgoyne when in 1777 he surrendered his 6,400 men at Saratoga, but he secreted the colors by a trick which some might consider smart, but others very unprofessional as he "gave his honor" that no public property was held back, saying us to the colors, that his expedition had left its flags behind in Canada, but, on the contrary, he had the ensigns torn from their staffs and gave them to the Baroness Reidesel who was instructed by her husband, a German General officer, to secret them. According to her memoirs she worked all night placing them in a mattress used by her, and which she was courteously permitted to retain. Thus, one of the thrifty German cousins of George III saved the colors of the entire force excepting those of the 9th regiment, which was stripped from its staff by the Lt. Colonel of that organization and secreted in his baggage, which he also was courteously permitted to retain, subsequently presenting the flag to the King who promoted him for his valiant service.

General Burgoyne's map of his detention camp indicates the position of fifteen distinct organizations, the Regiments 9th, 20th, 21st and 47th, Frazier's Rangers, Grenadiers, Light Infantry, Artillery and Canadian Battalion, and five German organizations, the Grenadier Battalion, German Artillery, Specht's, Reidesel's and Honou's Regiments, All these battle flags, under the terms of capitulation, made after the Burgoyne Expedition had lost three thousand of the original nine thousand men, should have been turned over just the same as the artillery, small arms, ammunition and other material instead of being secreted and smuggled away.

This condemnatory procedure of General Burgoyne in hiding his flags after a formal surrender, was not a precedent for the more honorable Lord Cornwallis, who, under similar stipulations covering his surrender, four years later, turned over the entire property of his expedition, though Washington demanded that the flags be cased.

A well-known picture of the surrender represents Cornwallis' army drawn up in proud array with waving flags, but that is altogether a painter's license, for not a flag was permitted to be flown.

Among the twenty-five flags taken at Yorktown were those of the following regiments 1st, 2d, 17th, 23d, 33d, 43d, 2d Battalion of the 71st, 76th, 80th, 82d, 17 Light Dragoons, a Brigade of Guards, Queen's Rangers, British Legion, Royal Artillery, five German Infantry Regiments, a Battery of German Artillery, a Tory Regiment, and a number of other flags not distinguishable because the insignias have been cut out, all representing the of nearly eight thousand men and one hundred and thirty-five brass and iron guns

The standards of the German Regiments, four feet square, were all made of doubled white damask embroidered in gold bullion and silver thread, on both sides with crowns and other devices, as mottoes, dates and monograms, and with silver bullion tassels suspended by silver cords

While on the subject of battle flags, I will add just here that in the Naval Academy in Annapolis is preserved a Royal Standard captured April, 1813, by Commodore Chauncy and General Pike, at the Parliament House, Toronto, this being, it is believed, the only Royal Standard ever taken from the British.

There are also at the Naval Academy the ensigns of twenty six English Naval prizes, comprehending the flags of five frigates, the "Guerriere," "Cyane," "Confiance," "Java," "Macedonian," and seven brigs, four sloops of war, nine schooners, and one cutter.

BURNET LANDRETH.

My name will appear upon the PRIMARY BALLOT to be voted for on JUNE 1st, 1907 FOR REGISTER OF WILLS

No boss, no ring, no clique, no clan, should ever own the public man.

If elected I will give the office personal attention and my best efforts.

Are You a Republican?

Just a word, please. It is impossible to interview each Republican voter.

The new Primary Act has brought the privilege of voting right near your home It seems fair—it should be.

But let us see what is going on! Suppose A, B, C, D and E arrange to have a fair, friendly race But when they appear upon the track with their steeds the Management of the race say, if for no other reason, that any person whose name begins with "C" shall have the privilege to start his horse from the first quarter pole, while all the others must start under the wire, wouldn't that be an intensely interesting race to the other contestants and their friends?

Now this illustrates, in part what the Bargain-Counter, Banquet Slating Bosses have done Well, are the Bosses, who claim to own the Republican party of Bucks County, bigger than the People? Not much

The grand Republican Commonwealth of Pennsylvania twice elected Robert E Pattison, a staunch Democrat, Governor, a State Treasurer and State Senator hold the boards, and two of the best county offices have just been vacated by Democrats Who is responsible? The Bosses

I am a Republican, but belong to no faction, nor fraction, of the party—no man shall rival me in adherence and fidelity to its principles.

Don't prostitute the new act. Give us a square deal, or it will not be long before you will see in County, State and National politics, the protesting voice of the whole people

Respectfully,
LENDRUM L WHITE

Former Bristolian Caught Yesterday.

John C. Palmateer, formerly a member of the grocery firm of Groff & Palmateer, of Bristol, but now a resident of Asbury Park, N. J, was foolish enough to ride into Bristol yesterday in a big automobile without any Pennsylvania license As he came down Radcliffe street, one of the policemen stopped him and the former Bristolian was hauled into the court of his old friend 'Squire Kraft, where the usual fine of ten dollars and costs were imposed

Fight On the Ferryboat.

Stacey Gaunt, of Mt. Holly, N. J, with a load of fighting whiskey on board, wanted to whip anybody on the ferryboat yesterday afternoon, and became so profane in his language that Grover Jackson, the pilot, attempted to put him ashore. Gaunt started a rough and tumble fight, but when Officers Tice and Bloodgood, who were summoned, got the offender out of the crowd, he had two black eyes and the blood was streaming from his nose Gaunt was kept in a cell in the station house all night, and will be given a hearing before Squire Kraft at noon today.

A Railroad Detour.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1906, by Frank H. Sweet

"THE Honduras has arrived two days earlier than expected. Report at once. You will take twenty cars over the N. I. and N., via St. Louis, to Cincinnati, where you will leave ten as per instructions which will be handed you, and then go on with the rest to Chicago."

The order was addressed to "Messenger 17," and the office boy who delivered it knew that 17 meant Carl Reuter of Five Mile Grenelle.

But Carl Reuter was just recovering from a severe attack of the grip, brought on by exposure while delivering fifteen cars of bananas over the L. and N. for Atlanta ten days before. A sudden blizzard had swept down upon them from the northwest, stalling the train with packed snow and lowering the thermometer 40 degrees in twice that many minutes. The cars had been warmed as usual before leaving New Orleans, with the expectation that the great mass of moist fruit would generate enough heat of itself for later warmth. But the change had come too soon and been too great, and in saving the fruit under his care Messenger 17 had neglected to take care of himself. He had got back to New Orleans, made his report, been complimented on getting his fruit through the blizzard in good condition and then had hurried home and to bed.

No steamer had come in since, and the Honduras was two days ahead of her time. Moreover, Carl was not a man who cared to share his personal matters with the public. Even his illness was his own. So it happened that the company had not heard.

But twenty minutes after the order came Carl Reuter, aged nineteen, was hurrying into the office on the company's wharf. A new man was at the desk

"Seventeen, sir," began Carl when the man, whose eyes were running down a page of a ledger before him, interrupted with

"Oh, yes, I see, 17. You are Carl Reuter?"

"Yes, sir. My father"—

But the man was pushing an envelope toward him.

"There's your instructions. Now hurry. You're a younger man than I imagined from what I have heard of you. But sometimes young men do fully as good work as the older ones. No, no," as Carl tried to speak, "there's no time for talk now. Your cars are nearly ready, I expect. We've half a thousand men down there emptying the steamer and loading the cars. The Honduras brought in the largest and finest lot we ever had, and they're going to be rushed through to market. The agent told me to tell you messengers to be especially vigilant with your thermometers on this trip. Have them ripen or retard the bananas so they will reach market in exactly the right condition. But of course you understand all this."

"Of course," Carl assented mechanically. "There," with evident anxiety, "My father is"—

"Never mind your father now," briskly. "You may tell me about him when you come back. Your train is on the wharf, track 3, forty cars, twenty of which will be in charge of Messenger 9, who will switch off at Corinth for Memphis. Get your section heated as rapidly as possible and then remove the stoves. By the time you're through the train will be ready to pull out, I think. Hustle! Oh, here's Messenger 9 now."

A heavily bearded man stopped at the desk and took the envelope which was handed him and then listened to the same advice Carl had been given. Carl lingered, apparently hoping for a chance to finish what he had commenced to say, but more messengers were hurrying into the office, and the man at the desk motioned imperatively toward the wharf

"Hurry along, 17," he ordered. From what I've been told I suppose you to be one of the best men we have, but you mustn't loiter like that. You haven't any time to waste in getting your section ready."

Carl's lips tightened suddenly, and he walked rapidly down the wharf, overtaking the heavily bearded man as he was crossing in front of two puffing engines to track 3. The man looked at him and nodded.

"Where's your father, Carl?" he asked. "Seems he and I are to be on the same train this time, at least as far as Corinth. I couldn't ask a better man on a rush trip like this is going to be."

"Father's sick," answered Carl. "I came down to see—to get his place. I've been watching him the last four or five nights, sleeping a little when I could, but he's well enough now to look after himself until I get back."

"Sick?" with some surprise. "Why, I hadn't heard. And you're to take his place on this trip? Ain't you pretty young? I wouldn't have thought the company'd agree to it, they're so particular, though," hastily, "you're perfectly competent, Carl. I know that. You've been with your father so many trips you know the ropes as well's he. And you've got a cool, clear head. That's what counts in ripening fruit by thermometers. And still—well, you know yourself how the company is about young help. I've got a boy of your age that I hope to get into a messenger's job some day, but I've never expected to till he was twenty-five or more. You're lucky; that's all I've got to say. If you make this trip all right, you'll be on the books for steady runs before the year's out."

Carl's face had grown hot and uncomfortable.

"You don't understand," he explained. "I"—

But a man down the track was looking toward them and motioning. Messenger 9 hurried away.

"Well, I hope you'll have good luck, as, of course, you will," he called back over his shoulder. "We'll be too busy to see much of each other on the trip I take the twenty end cars on account of switching off at Corinth. Yours'll be forward."

Until that moment Carl's head had been in a whirl. Events had followed each other so rapidly, so apparently beyond his personal option in the matter that he had allowed his self to be borne on the current. Now he decided to let it go on. He had hurried down to explain about his father and to see if he would not be allowed to fill the place But from what he knew himself and from what 9 had just said he realized how slight was the chance. Perhaps even his father would be suspended for a time. The company did not make much allowance for sickness or convalescence. Their work was too important.

But, as 9 had conceded, he understood the work and could probably do it just as well as his father, and just now they were in special need of employment. His younger brother was in the hospital waiting an operation, and money must be had to meet the expenses.

So he hurried down track 3 to the end of his—or rather his father's—section of the train and began a careful examination of the cars. Then he set about seeing that they were properly treated. The mercury was down to 34 degrees, which was unusually cold for New Orleans, and 12 degrees lower than the messengers had started out at any previous time during the winter. Other messengers were giving their cars a little more heat than common, for it would be twelve to fifteen hours before the now cool bananas could begin to generate warmth of the brown, and the freezing or even chilling of a train load would mean the loss of a fortune. Carl gave his cars several degrees more than was customary and then had the stoves removed and the doors closed. Even with an outside low temperature the carefully built cars would then retain heat until the fruit began to generate some of its own. An hour later the train pulled out.

A cold wave had been predicted, but apparently some weather condition had stayed or swerved it in another direction. Before they were by out the city limits the mercury commenced to rise, and when they rumbled through Meridian it marked 60 degrees and continued to go up.

Carl began to look anxious All his ventilators were now wide open, but the air in the cars was moist and stifling. Instead of being chilled, the danger was now that the bananas would overheat, which would be just as disastrous.

A messenger's duty is to see that his fruit gets into market in just the right condition. He must retard or advance the ripening by cold or heat, according to the condition of the fruit, the length of the trip and other circumstances. He must know from a mere glance at a bunch of bananas how many degrees of heat will be required to ripen it in a prescribed number of hours, and if he be a good messenger he must be able to have his fruit in just the right condition when he reaches his destination, whether it be four days or fourteen. With refrigerator cars and ventilators it is comparatively easy during the summer to shift the thermometers to the requirements of the fruit, and even in winter, when it continues cold, there are the initial stoves and the generated warmth to depend upon, but when an unexpected hot wave confronts a messenger in midwinter he has little but the resource of his own ingenuity to count on Such a problem was now facing Carl. When they pulled into Corinth the mercury was 70 degrees, and there was no air stirring. Another twenty-four hours like this and he would scarcely get his fruit to Cincinnati, much less Chicago.

Messenger 9 came to him as his section was being transferred to a train for Memphis. The weather report stated that it was 12 degrees warmer at Memphis than at Corinth, and 9 was looking perturbed. His market was only a short distance away now, but twelve more degrees meant an uncontrolled ripening of the fruit. It could not reach even that near market in prime condition, which was every messenger's ambition.

"I'm out and out sorry for you, Carl," said 9 sympathetically. "It's going to be tough on all the messengers with such a special lot of fruit, but you'll have it worst. They assigned your father to the long Chicago run because he has the name of being the best man on the road, but for that very reason it'll be worse on you, being your first trip. You'll likely get some seconds to Cincinnati, but I'm afraid the Chicago ten cars won't pay the running cost over the railroads—that is, unless it turns cold within a few hours."

But there was no prospect of its turning cold. A hurried consultation of the weather bureau at Corinth showed that three or four more days of warm weather were predicted. It was warm all along the road to Cincinnati, to Chicago. The only cool places in the country seemed to be in the mountains, about Chattanooga, up the Hudson and west in the Rockies. Messenger 9 advised him to take the responsibility of selling the fruit at Corinth for what it would bring. That would save the company its total loss and transportation charges.

Carl was not ready for that, however. The consultation of the weather reports had already given his quick brain another idea, daring, but entirely feasible, he thought. His cars would have to wait three hours at Corinth to connect with a freight which pulled out directly behind the through express north. Carl utilized the first forty minutes of these three hours in developing his plan. He went straight to the office of the Southern railway, whose branch ran from Corinth to Chattanooga and there connected with the N. I. and T. for Cincinnati and Chicago.

"Wish to run your cars over our road?" asked the division superintendent after listening to Carl's hurried request. "Yes, I reckon so. We'll couple them to the afternoon freight, which pulls out about dark. The morning freight leaves in half an hour, and there isn't time to connect you with that. Besides, the train already has thirty-four cars, as much as the engine can carry up grade."

"But that's the very train I want to couple to," urged Carl impetuously. "You forget that I have an engine. Why can't we put the two ahead? They'll pull fifty-four cars all right even up grade."

The superintendent nodded thoughtfully.

"Yes, that might do," he said. "In fact, I think it will do very well. There's considerable snow up Chattanooga way, and two engines can plow through it better than one. But we'll have to hustle if we get you connected, for the train must pull out on time. There's another follows it forty minutes later."

They did hustle, and when the train pulled out for Chattanooga Carl's twenty cars formed part of it. Besides having all the ventilators open, each car had its door rolled back to let in every whiff of air possible At Decatur the thermometers indicated 45 degrees, at Stevenson 34 degrees. Carl closed all the doors and partly closed the ventilators of the cars destined for Cincinnati. He was willing they should have a few more degrees of heat now and believed that he saw the way to getting his fruit to both markets in prime condition. At Chattanooga the mercury registered 20 degrees, and all the ventilators were closed

Eight days later Carl reported at the office on the company's wharf. The man at the desk listened to his explanation in grim silence, tapping the ledger with the head of his pencil occasionally.

"It's something very unusual," he said when Carl finished. "very unusual and—er—reprehensible, running our cars about the country in a wild way like that. Ordinarily it would mean dismissal from our service—permanent discharge—but—er," his face relaxing somewhat, "under the circumstances, and in view of the fact that you had the longest run and are the only messenger who got his fruit into market in prime condition, we will say no more about it except that we have put your name on our books for regular runs I hope your father will be well enough to take his trip when the next boat comes in. We do not like to spare good men And, oh, yes," as Carl was turning away, his eyes shining, "the cashier has a little recognition for you from the company. You may stop at his window as you go by."

MAKING FEATHERS GROW.

How Japan's Long Tailed Fowls Are Fed and Coaxed For Results.

That the long tailed fowl was early in Japan is credible from the legend, evidently of abysmal antiquity, of Ama Terasu, the sun goddess, who, having retired into a cavern, to the intense discomfort of the world, was merrily enticed out again by the crowing of a long tailed cock—to remind her, no doubt, that it was her usual hour to appear. Another somewhat ghostly evidence of the antiquity of the breed has been cited in the hoo bird, which was pictured in Japan as early as the eighth century. This fabulous bird resembles both pheasant and peacock, but it has clearly the tail and a very luxuriant one, of the fowls of Tosa, in which every feather, as the poetical Japanese remarks, resembles a leaf blade of the mystical bamboo.

It is known that in many kinds of birds certain feathers continue to grow until they are lost by molting, and in all birds it happens occasionally that a feather may be molted at an irregular time Accordingly it follows that if fowls can be secured which are irregular in the period of molting let us say, the tail feathers, these will continue to grow longer for the reason that they have had a longer time in which to grow. From this beginning it is now possible to infer that by a process of carefully selecting and breeding from these fowls in which the molting season is suppressed in certain parts of the body it would be possible to obtain a variety in which the tail feathers would be much longer than in other fowls.

A second but very important part of the process consists in feeding the bird to the maximum degree in order to stimulate the growth of the feathers. At the same time the bird should not be allowed to dissipate its energy by leading an active life or to run unnecessary chances of breaking the constantly growing feathers. Thus I learned from the fanciers at Tosa that it is customary to confine the birds in relatively small cages and to feed them often and with peculiar food Details of the latter I was unable to secure, although certain hints were given me as to the virtue of boiled unhusked rice, of an occasional scrap of eel and of diakon (giant radish) leaf. I fancy, though, that any kind of poultry food may be used. But in this regard one is cautious in drawing a hard and fast conclusion, because it is known that feathers are subject to modification in various ways dependent upon food. Thus the color of the feathers of certain parrots has been strikingly changed by the south sea islanders, who feed the birds upon the fat of a peculiar fish. And canary birds are given a reddish color under special conditions, as by the fanciers in the Harz mountains.

In many cases, in order to avoid accident to the long feathers, early fancier finds it, I am told, convenient to coil up the longest feathers and wrap and tie them carefully in soft paper, so that the bird runs a minimum chance of breaking them. High perches are emphatically advocated. I have been told, not on the best evidence, however, that in some cases the bird is confined in a tight cage, so that it is not possible for it to shift its position. In this cramped way, with the tail hanging down behind, a bird is said to be kept penned up miserably for periods of months Certain it is that under favorable conditions the growth of the tail feathers can be forced by the fancier Under ordinary conditions a cock whose tail measures five or six feet will rarely grow longer feathers, for, by active life, it is probable that a gradual molting of these long feathers takes place. On the other hand, molting is more apt to be suppressed by the unwholesome living of a bird during the process of overfeeding. If, accordingly, a cock whose tail feathers are of the normal maximum length be taken in training by a skilled fancier, he can, I am told, stimulate a growth in these feathers at the rate of about six inches per month.—Professor Bashford Dean in Century.

The secret of striking a fish, especially a trout, which bites quickly, whether in brook, river or lake, is to give a sharp upturn of the wrist. This will move the rod or bait only two or three inches and will not jerk it from the water. If you miss the fish will follow the few inches, not being frightened, and in the majority of cases will be hooked at once. The quick jerking of the bait from the water almost invariably scares a trout—result, a dark streak disappearing down the stream.

If Glasses Get Stuck.

When two glasses get stuck, one inside the other, an unfailing remedy for separating them is to plunge them upright into some hot water for a quarter of a minute or thereabouts. Care must be taken that no water gets into either glass. The explanation is that the heat expands the outer glass before it has time to penetrate and expand the one inside.

Dropped.

"Why does Miss Elder always drop her eyes when she meets you?"

"If you will never give it away I will tell you. She drops her eyes because I saw her drop her teeth one day."

CIRCUS RING HORSES.

The Way They Are Trained For Their Showy Work.

TAKES TIME AND PATIENCE.

The Willing Animals Must Be Shown, Not Whipped, and They Readily Respond to the Efforts of the Trainer. The Whip and the Apple.

In purchasing an animal for circus ring work—bareback—intuition in the purchaser is perhaps a more important factor than mere technical knowledge, but both are important. However, beyond such intuition the points to be looked for are broad breast, straight, broad back, short coupled body and a broad, intelligent forehead. He must be young and, of course, sound and well marked. After he and the trainer have met and come to know each other the latter gets on him for a trot around the ring, giving the animal his own gait for awhile, then bringing him into a lope. Next he is given a little spur—always pointless and usually a ten cent piece with the milling worn down so that it does not cut the skin—and the knees of the rider are pressed in gradually until the animal comes to canter. This is continued patiently and with many encouraging words until the horse gets his right leg out—the left-leg out is what is known as a "false gallop." The wise trainer insists on the theory that all horses, candidates for the ring, are from the Iron Mountain State—must be shown, not whipped—and when once the animal gets the idea that his trainer's motives are of the kindliest it is surprising how quickly he responds in kind.

After the horse has been broken into a proper gait large pieces of paper are scattered about the ring, sacks thrown up before his head, dummy figures cast on and off his back, pistols fired into the air and under the feet, drums beaten on his back and under and around him to accustom him to all sorts of intimidating noises and sights. To a nervous animal this is a trying experience, and confidence in his master, who continually soothes him with reassuring words, is all that keeps the pupil from going to pieces. But even then some are panic stricken, and the trainer's motto is, "Take time—have patience" He then works the novice around the ring with an experienced animal, allows him to smell of the saddle and other objects used and bite them if he wants to. But sometimes, even after all this, the subject is found to be too nervous to stand the strain, and he is turned out for a few days, weeks or months or longer, as may seem best

Early in his training the horse is handled all over until he becomes so used to it that he will not flinch After he has been broken to gait and noises a dummy rider is put up in such a manner that it will flop pretty much all over his back. When he has got used to this a real rider takes the place of the dummy. However, even after the circus horse has been through all these experiences, he will sometimes sulk. In that event the trainer gives him "one—two" across the front legs with a whip, and there is no more sulking after that, for the impression of this, his first real punishment, is a lasting one. An "Ah, ah, there!" usually is sufficient thereafter to correct him.

Some horses will break in two weeks, but put a new rider up and the animal seems possessed, throwing the equestrian the moment he essays a stand, but this generally is found to be the fault of the rider Some, with feet at horse, standing in one place too long, will get an animal ticklish after awhile, causing him to kick and squeal, thus ruining an otherwise artistic performance, and then the rider has to be requested to move about more on the horse's back. The feet of an experienced rider, you will observe if you take notice, are never in one spot for more than an instant. They are constantly on the move, working much as a ballet dancer's do.

To teach him to kneel touch his knees with the whip and have the groom put him down gently with trip straps, one foot at a time. The animal should wear knee caps in this schooling so as not to intimidate or make him stubborn. In lying down tactics use the same two straps, hoppling him in a harness. Tap gently on both knees with the whip, have the groom pull the straps, and down goes the horse on his knees. Next pull down on the reins and touch the whip lightly to the hip. Sometimes the beginner will flop heavily. In this event the trainer does the fall all over again, both he and the groom bracing against the animal as he comes down to show that falling sect will not hurt him. Such an object lesson is usually found effective. Apples and sugar are used freely as a reward for work well done. Sitting up on the haunches is accomplished by lifting on the reins, coaxing the horse gently so he does not want to jump up and run away, which is the natural instinct with the beginner Should he have done wrong when he returns to the stable the trainer says, "No apples today, sir," at the same time showing him an apple and taking it away after allowing him to smell of it Two or three experiences of this sort and the animal sees a great light. He has been shown.—Frank Patchin in Leslie's Weekly.

Quadrupeds That Lay Eggs.

The salesman as he wrapped up the eggs conversed politely.

"There are quadrupeds that lay, ma'am," he said.

"That lay eggs?"

"Yes. They are mammals, ma'am, too. Their home is in South America, their names are the ornithorhynchus, or duck billed platypus, and the echidna, or porcupine ant eater. They are the lowest mammals known."

"Really?"

"Oh, yes! The duck billed platypus lays two eggs at a time. But the echidna lays but one egg, which it carries in a natural pouch beneath its stomach—there's an idea for the hen there—until the kid echidna, so to speak, is hatched out."—Los Angeles Times.
